5

Private Jet Types and How to Choose

1. Very Light Jets for Short Regional Trips

Very light jet rentals typically seat four to six passengers and can travel 1,000 to 1,500 miles without stopping. They're built for quick regional trips, not long hauls, and can access smaller regional airports that larger jets can't reach.

2. Light Jets for Everyday Business Travel

Light jets extend the comfortable flying range to around 2,000 miles and typically seat six to eight passengers. They also feature larger cabin space and baggage capacity, which makes them a common choice for short-haul business travel.

3. Midsize Jet Charters Are Often the Most Versatile Option

A midsize jet usually seats seven to nine passengers and offers a long enough range for most coast-to-coast domestic routes. Standing headroom and a larger baggage compartment also make this category comfortable for longer trips.

4. Super-Midsize Jets for Longer Legs

Super-midsize jets push the range to roughly 3,500 to 4,000 miles and typically seat eight to 10 passengers. The cabin is quieter and more spacious than a standard midsize jet, which meaningfully enhances the experience on longer flights.

5. Large Cabin Jets for Long-Range and Larger Groups

Large cabin jets seat 10 to 16 passengers and can typically travel 4,000 to 6,000 miles or more without refueling. A full stand-up cabin and conference-style seating make them suited for larger groups or teams that want to work in flight.

Presented by:
TheFlightKing.com

THE FLIGHT KING